

Abstract of the Invention

A device and method for accessing a vehicle having electrically or electronically activated door locks using a fingerprint sensor to detect persons having rights of entry. The device includes means to selectively open doors, trunks, etc., using different fingers and is used in conjunction with an existing access control and alarm system.